Thank you! I was having this same issue, I was starting Pidgin as a daemon and it kept asking for root password even though I was using sudo. The reason for this is that it was saving all the accounts that it generated in the system. Here is the fix for it. Click to expand... This is pretty irritating. I know they fixed this in the 3.0.4 release as it seems that accounts saved in the system is one of the issues. But the final fix is to use: Click to expand... `/usr/libexec/Pidgin/pidgin-debug-mask &` to start pidgin if you need to: Click to expand... I actually ran into this and I was thinking that this would probably fixed it, but it didn't. However, I did notice that the pidgin-debug-mask command did throw this error, and if I put a pidgin-debug-mask in quotes it did seem to fix it: I've recently started experiencing issues with Pidgin on my machine. I have Pidgin 2.10.4, Gnome 2.24.2, and I use an AMD Athlon 64 X2 Dual Core Processor 4400 (2.4 GHz, same kind of machine as the two previous suggestions here, except mine has 8 GB of RAM). If I use one or two accounts with no space or theme options set, pidgin works perfectly. 3a67dffeec

What's New in the AwayNotify?

VimTalk AwayNotify displays away messages in the conversation window of VimTalk when a buddy goes away. It shows you when you are no longer notified by the buddy. There is no core time for when a buddy goes away, but in general it will be when the buddy stops giving messages or is disconnected. After the away message, you can either close the "away" dialog or do whatever you want to do. It is also possible to provide a custom time to go away. How to use VimTalk AwayNotify: Installation is easy; just enable VimTalk AwayNotify and Pidgin will handle all of the other settings for you. To set up VimTalk AwayNotify: Use the Configure

Notifications button on the left of the notification tray Click on the > button (next to the chat room) Click on the Update Settings link Uncheck the icon to the left of the AwayNotify notification and check "Show AwayNotify". If you want, you can change the text that is displayed when your away buddy goes away. Click on the Help button to see all of the available options. On some systems, some plugins will conflict with each other. If you receive errors, first make sure you have a newer version of the Pidgin and VimTalk plugins than the ones that VimTalk AwayNotify conflicts with.
