What's new in Purrfect Apawcalypse: Love At Furst Bite:

Character Analysis Purrfect Apawcalypse is both a betrayal of her trust in Otis and Pimpleby and an act of revenge-driven rebellion against him. Shaftening out of that bitterness is the realization that she can survive his selfishness. Oh, she doesn't want him to die so she'll expend as much effort as possible to make sure that doesn't happen! Noses. Purrfect Apawcalypse's design and worldbuilding is all about overt sexism, like a grown man saying "Oh girl, why didn't you wait for me?!” and every other word is “girl”. Purrfect Apawcalypse’s clothing choices for the majority of the strip are a direct result of the political correctness movement, and in particular, the push for gender equality. Purrfect Apawcalypse stands for all oppressed people. Purrfect Apawcalypse’s arguments have less weight than Pimpleby. Purrfect Apawcalypse’s status as the leader of the group both because she’s confident and because she is bald is a direct assault on Pimpleby’s claims to be the leader because he’s confident and because he’s covered in fur. Purrfect Apawcalypse resists repeating Pimpleby’s actions, but she still does them sometimes, just to make Pimpleby feel like a dog. Purrfect Apawcalypse takes meticulous care of all her animals Love at Furst Bite has an incredibly strong theme of freedom, exactly because Otis is fated to be an air-breathing dog and very rarely is allowed out of the cage. At the same time, Purrfect Apawcalypse struggles with her relationship with Otis. She doesn’t want to let him out of that cage because then he would be free, and that’s bad. On the other hand, she can’t keep him locked up because what if he dies? I think it’s safe to say that Otis and Purrfect Apawcalypse are meant to be together, but not yet. Because they have to learn to trust each other first before they can be a couple. Purr
