: Charles Stuart Legge, 15th Duke of Manchester The 15th Duke of Manchester, Charles Stuart Legge, was born on September 10, 1880 in Gloucestershire, England. No relation to the Duke of Manchester at the time, Charles Stuart was born a third generation Lancastrian. As Charles's parents were separated during his birth and she didn't pick him up, his birth caused him to be named Charles Stuft Legge in accordance with the popular English media naming practice at the time. Charles and his siblings were raised by a nanny, Elizabeth Burgess. Since there were no known relationships for this woman, she may have been the nanny of the Duke's great-grandfather or even the great-grandmother to be as one of the Duke's parents was Edward Charles Stuart and he was the great-grandson of the Duke's great-grandmother. Born into the prestigious Legge family, Charles Stuart was the third surviving male of his line. Given the stigma and lack of spotlight of not being born of the blood royal that his family enjoyed, Charles Stuart was upset at being nameless. Eventually, a formal union with a girl called Elizabeth Smith was found and brought about the birth of Charles Stuart. Charles Stuart had two sisters and a brother. Being the third child of the two, his brother Richard Francis Legge was born eighteen years prior. Because Charles Stuart came to inherit the rank and titles of 15th Duke of Manchester, after the death of his parent, he was the 17th Duke of Manchester. This would be at a time when the Duke of Manchester's second son, Henry Frederick, was the 24th Duke. Since Charles Stuart never married, his siblings inherited all his rights and title, allowing him the ability to hold all his titles, lands, and lands rich in the production of land that are the property of the Lord of the Manor. Charles Stuart Legge was in attendance at the wedding of Princess Mary to the Duke of Connaught on September 27th, 1903. His presence left the small detail that most of the guests of the Duke of Connaught didn't have a clear view of of Charles Stuart's head or face, which would be ironic since the bride was a pretender to the throne of England. This is understandable especially since Princess Mary was announced as a pretender to the throne when the 11th Duke died. Today, it's impossible to tell if the Amrinone is used for the treatment of congestive heart failure. It has been proposed that amrinone increases potassium excretion in urine and reduces urinary potassium losses. By contrast, it has been postulated that amrinone may also increase potassium loss through the feces. Therefore, an analysis was made of the potential role of amrinone in the decreased potassium and phosphorous levels in plasma and urine.
