Fun, Beautiful, Enhanced Online Play - "I love the game's many charming elements, from its illustrations to its many beautiful music arrangements. Moreover, I love the game's story, in which you can play out your own story with others online. My only grievance is that the story feels like a prelude." Casual Players Love Its Abstract Gameplay - "It takes a little while to get used to the game's speed and the fact that you can die just as easily as you can win, but once you get used to it, you realize that this game is a great deal of fun. It's easy to get lost in the game, which makes it easy to lose yourself too. I like the fact that there are limitations to how much of the world you can explore, and the fact that there are no real objectives besides victory makes the game a lot more fun than a conquest-oriented RPG." Strikingly Beautiful Graphics and Sound - "The graphics are beautiful. There are animations that make the story more engaging. The music is also excellent; music in video games is a hobby of mine, and I have spent plenty of time immersed in the wonderful music of games like Tales of Symphonia, Final Fantasy, and Dragon Quest VIII. The songs in this game are also excellent; I can't help but be impressed by their quality." Strategy Game and Tons of Action - "The strategy elements are nothing new, but that's OK because the whole game is only about taking out enemies, and I had a blast doing just that. What I found intriguing was the new four-player online feature. It seems to be based on something similar to the turn-based card game, Yu-Gi-Oh, and I'll have to find out how it works." Combat Every time you attack a monster, the battle begins. Your character's speed and strength are both increased, and your character starts the battle with a magic power that can be used before the enemy attacks. When monsters are hit by your attacks, it is not possible to win the battle by knocking them down. Rather, a battle will begin as soon as the monsters are hit. From here, you can use an attack that has a relatively high effect against the enemy. When monsters have been defeated in a battle, the point at which your attack inflicted damage to the enemy is displayed on the bottom-left corner of the screen. If it is a monster, the HP will be displayed as an overline, and the HP will be reduced. Monsters can be left over from the previous day. It is possible to move through a map with monsters. You can also use a special attack during battles with a monster. The attack uses up a Gauge. This Gauge can be increased by selecting an enemy monster. Once the Gauge is full, you can use a special attack. You cannot perform any actions when monsters are in range, or when they are waiting in ambush. To attack a monster, press the attack button. If you press it and a Gauge icon appears, the gauge will increase. When the Gauge is full, you can attack a monster. There are three types of attacks, each with a different effect: Normal Attack, Repel, and Skill. Normal Attack: The hit point of a monster will be increased. The power of your attacks will be increased. You can use a special attack when you are being attacked. With Skill, your defense will be increased, and it will be impossible for the enemy to attack you. Repel: When you are attacked, the enemy monster will be repulsed away for a certain period of time. You can use a special attack during this time. Monster formations may be taken into consideration when determining when to attack. When monsters are going to be defeated, they may become scattered. When a monster is defeated, it will return to its original position. Monster formations may be taken into consideration when determining when to attack.
