Q: Default Material Icons causing overflow in Angular Component I'm using Angular's Material Icons in a component and for some reason, whenever I set the default appearance to 'outline-none' (which I assume is the default for Material Icons), the component becomes overflow: hidden and you can't see the whole component. See screenshot below: I'm not using the Material Icons though, I'm just using the CSS classes and the Font Awesome icon classes. Is there something else that I'm missing? This example I was using is not the problem as it works fine using any other type of icon. A: You need to add the icon classes. To use them, you need to add hello world to your html file. Example below: hello world Good Things (1993 film) Good Things () is a 1993 Czechoslovak film directed by Jan Troell. Plot The story is about a family. It takes place at a point in the 1960s and 70s when the traditional family structure was starting to disappear; a time when the communists seemed to have 'solved' the problems of the 'family crisis'. A young couple tries to find themselves in each other. It takes place in a small town with a idyllic atmosphere. It is a real social drama. Cast Václav Menách as Jáchym Kamila Kotobiková as Ženy Pavel Tříska as Horst Ilja Freindl as Karel Ivana Sztul as Salka Alexandre Brasseur as Franz Radoslav Brzobohatý as Úkolcový policista Martin Hochvat as Matěj Vladimír Svoboda as Pótka Ota Hanko as Úkolcový důstojník Jiří Fiala as Korál Kamil Slovák as Tommyš Ladislav Palouš as Hamza Alfred Nier as Donat Václav Sýkora

Q: use of self in class body I would like to understand the usage of self in class body and in methods with self parameter. class foo def self.bar puts 'bar' end end and class foo def self.bar(self) puts 'bar' end end It is clear that in both cases method bar will be created only once and instance variables will be created only once. What I do not understand is why in case of self parameter passed to method bar, I can use this context to find instance variables and call methods on them? Does the keyword'self' in class methods with a self parameter has something to do with declaring a method as an instance method? A: self is the first parameter in a method. So your second example: def self.bar(self) Will match only the foo.bar method because self is the first parameter, and the others will not match. The actual context of the foo.bar method is the foo instance. Accessing variables and calling methods on this will call those on the foo instance. So in your example, foo.bar will call foo.instance_variable_get(:@bar) or foo.instance_eval(:bar). A: The self is first parameter of a method, and its a meta programming tool. The self keyword simply refers to the instance object for that specific method call. E.g. def self.foo puts "hello" end foo.foo #=> "hello" A: We call it as a metaprogramming tool, because for all we know, self might be the only parameter to the foo method. Also, if you're ever confused, just check the autocomplete options and it's really clear. Q: Joining two tables on col-1 and col-2 which contains same id but different data I have two tables T1 and T2. T1 contains 5 times I, II, III and V. T2 contains other information for I, II, III and V. Now I need to show the following result I I II III IV V 55 A 52 B 69 C A:
