You only have so much time in a day. You also have client appointments that need to be scheduled. If you are counseling hundreds of clients per week it is critical that you schedule time to allow for reflection and training for the sessions with the clients to ensure the best outcomes. You need to be able to stay on the same page with the client so that you are able to deliver the best service. As a mentor or coach, the practice of therapy being too slow and lengthy then not giving the client back what he or she is paying for is unacceptable. The beauty of a counselor or therapist, whether it is online or traditional is to be able to look into the soul and assess what the client wants and needs. The key to a successful outcome is for you to have a good rapport with the client and not feel like you are "hanging out with a pal." FULL SCREEN WIDTH: The practice of therapy being too slow and lengthy then not giving the client back what he or she is paying for is unacceptable. The beauty of a counselor or therapist, whether it is online or traditional is to be able to look into the soul and assess what the client wants and needs. The key to a successful outcome is for you to have a good rapport with the client and not feel like you are "hanging out with a pal." Be honest, be direct, be concise. Do not be in a hurry to leave or jump into the next client, that is when the client and counselor lose connection. One of the main differences between a counselor and a counselor is that a counselor will seek to develop a rapport with the client, know what the client wants and needs, and allow the client to tell his or her story.

The client should take control of their life and stop depending on the counselor to make sure they are making the right decisions. A counselor needs to be able to bring in tools and resources a client can use on their own like a book which is full of good advice to steer them in the right direction. I think marriage counselors should be able to have successful marriages before they ever meet a client. Marriage counseling should include medical advice on the healthy marriage plan which include the clients sex life, their finances, and the kids. I think it would be better if a counselor had a good balance of their own stuff and the clients stuff to allow the clients to feel as if they can voice their opinion with a counselor and not have them criticize them for something they didnt know about. Most counselors/therapists work part time. They do not see 100 new clients in a day, in fact many therapists/counselors only see about 15 new clients a week. It takes a lot of time to review each case, and you have to find every new case, follow up on old cases, set up the first appointment, setup an intake form, and follow up on things that didn't seem to be taking place during the sessions themselves. Don't schedule an appointment the same day you've received an intake, you need time to review the case, follow up on old cases, and set up a new appointment. To be honest, some of the cases that come in are odd cases that are trying to work out how they can work on getting better. For this reason, the intake office needs time to sort through the case, determine if the client is a good candidate for counseling and refer them on to the right therapist. This means a therapist might not open an intake the same day they've received an intake, they might need to wait for the intake case to be reviewed by the intake office. 5ec8ef588b
