your users will love the streamlined view that sets your mixer faders and panels side-by-side. view it as youd see it in the dj console or in a standard recording console. whether youre using the desktop app or the web app, your center view is the same, so your users will always be able to quickly reassemble their mix. and when you need to go back to your standard view, toggle it from either side of the app. the id3-tag editor lets you input, view, and save all of the necessary information for your music files, including artist, title, album, track, genre, year, and more. and now studio one lets you keep track of the instrument mix without having to open up studio one. simply create a list of your favorite instruments, or group them together for even easier organization. you can easily create a track that automatically loads your selected instruments, or add instrument tracks to the cue list for fast and easy automations. once youve added and saved your list of music to your library, youre all set to work! the powerful mixer provides hardware control of its mixer faders and pan settings. pan does not apply to individual instrument channels, but rather to a large mixing or music effects surface area like the entire instrument rack. pan allows you to adjust your mixer faders in multiple directions to maximize the flexibility of how you mix your music, and enables you to use your mixing console with a greater range of sound colors. use the mixer controls to mute tracks, adjust your headphone volume, balance your speakers, or control your floor monitor without having to use the main mixer window. when adjusting pan settings, there is no "hard panning" which is detrimental to most dj mixes. track volumes are still controlled by the master track fader, and the ability to increase the volume of non-master tracks is respected. in the mixer, there is no limit to the number of tracks you can mix. the master track fader will control only the volume of that track, and the other tracks will follow the master track level independent of the master level. 5ec8ef588b
