Cerebrospinal fluid flow in the brain and spinal cord during transient hypothermia. The effect of transient hypothermia on CSF flow in the brain and spinal cord was studied using a single-pass, dual-isotope (^{31}P and ^{23}Na) infusion technique. The radioisotopes were delivered in a perfusate that was continuously recirculated through the CSF. Recirculation of the bolus of perfusate ensured that the time course of tracer dilution in the CSF was similar to that seen with a bolus injection. In f988f36e3a
