Kumpulan Foto Artis Telanjang Rar.Q: Generating a differential drive I have to find the differential gear ratio between rotational speed of radius  $r_1$ ,  $r_2$  and angular speed of the arm  $w$  at Point  $B$ . According to my professor, for a differential gear it should be:  $\frac{v_r}{v_w} = \frac{r_2}{r_1}$  which means the gear ratio is  $\infty$  or if the radius is infinitesimally smaller or larger than the arm's, then it gives me  $2$  for the gear ratio. But, I don't think I understand what a differential gear does. Any clarification? A: The simplest differential drive is only a half-gear, but it has infinitely many shaft lengths, and hence infinitely many gear ratios. In fact, when you have a differential drive, the only "hard-wired" gear ratio is  $1$ . In fact, the difference  $r_2/r_1$  is identical to the ratio of the two radii (see, e.g., so the statement "differential drive has infinite gear ratios" is wrong. The differential ratio is  $1$  in all cases. You might say that in a differential drive, the drive shaft is split into two branches, the left one with radius  $r_1$  and angular
