Diabetes can be characterized as a metabolic disease that is caused by a persistent defect in insulin secretion, insulin action, or both. Emotional expression of diabetes has not been comprehensively investigated yet. To determine the link between emotional expression and glucocorticoid levels in diabetes, we examined the emotional expression of type 2 diabetes patients and age-matched healthy controls via performance on the Edinburgh Handedness Inventory, the Beck Depression Inventory, the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory and the Emotional Intelligence Scale. Salivary cortisol and glucose were also measured to explore the link between emotional expression of diabetes and glucocorticoid levels. Both the left-handed and right-handed diabetic patients showed higher anxiety levels and higher emotional intelligence scores than healthy controls. Diabetic patients with lower glucocorticoid levels showed less anxiety and higher emotional intelligence scores than those with higher glucocorticoid levels. Diabetic patients with lower cortisol levels had lower anxiety levels and higher emotional intelligence scores. These findings suggest that emotional expression of diabetes is influenced by the link between diurnal glucose variations and glucocorticoid levels.
